Charlie Chaplin “The Tramp” – Strike Lighters

articles

Contributed by Ed Urlik

Ronson made an early figural lighter featuring Charlie Chaplin as “The Tramp” also known as “The Little Tramp”. Cast as a homage to the icon in world cinema during the era of silent film, this detailed figural Ronson lighter of Charlie Chaplin’s most memorable on-screen character is fitted in a pair of large “baggy” pants, tight coat, bowler hat, large pair of shoes, springy-flexible cane, and “toothbrush” moustache. Also referred to as “The Square-Base Charlie Chaplin” by seasoned collectors, as a similar version of this lighter on a round-base is not thought to be made by Ronson. Standing 6-1/2 inches in height, this very rare lighter was offered in a metallic-aluminum finish with enameled features in green, red and black. It was also offered in a bright copper-plated finish with black enameled hat. A knurled, threaded, screw-in wand that is typically seen with early Ronson Pocket Strike Lighters located in top of the hat; flint strip on the top-right area of the square base. “Chas. Chaplin” is cast into front of base; “AMW © 1915” is cast into rear of base. Catalog No. Unknown. Circa 1918.

Some Zippo Trivia

Articles

Contributed by Judith Sanders

Several years ago we had an article in our newsletter about Hinckley Lighters made by Zippo. The Hinckley Company at that time made luxury sailing yachts.

One of the Officers decided to have some Zippo made with some of their models “in relief” on the front. They also chose to use the “loss proof” Zippos so their customers could have the lighters with them everywhere they traveled.

I found a picture of two of these beautiful Hinckley lighters recently, and thought I would share this with you all. I have never owned one of these, although one member did years ago. If you ever run across one, please let us know!

Uncatalogued Dunhill

articles

Contributed by Peter Malouf

The uncatalogued Dunhill “rectangular bijou covered,” crafted in 9ct gold “fine line” ET, was first introduced in 1929. It bears a resemblance to the shape of the compendiums with rare cover over the “unique” mechanism. To the best of my knowledge, its origin is uncertain, as it was created during the transition period when AD switched from William Frederick Wright (WFW) to Ramsden & Roed (R&R) workshop. While the fine line ET is more commonly associated with R&R workshops, it’s important to note that R&R was formed from a core group of employees from WFW. There are only a few known pieces.

Gadgets with Lighters

Contributed by Judith Sanders

Over the many years of this club, we have some creative members. One of the creative members was the late Warren Gerber. When Warren first joined, I got to see his collection when we had a convention in his city. Not only did he have a lot of lighters, he liked to create gadgets with his lighters like this one:

As well as the Imco as an engine, can you see other lighter related items in the picture?
